

write your grandparents biography

It's time to become a biographer and write about some very special people – your grandparents!

Grandparents and grandchildren share a special bond, and it's wonderful to find out about the way our grandparents lived when they were children.

Arrange a time to meet with them, or plan a call.

Let them know you'll be asking five questions about their life.

You might like to ask them:

1. What did you eat for breakfast?
2. How long did it take you to get to school?
3. How did you get to school?
4. What was your favourite subject?
5. What did you eat for school lunch?

Write each question on a piece of paper and record the answers underneath, leaving room for illustrations. You could make copies to share with your grandparents and your family! Herbert Peabody would love to see what you've done too!
